The Art Of Living

Love is the philosophy of life. Pure and simple!? To live creatively and meaningfully, self-concern must be wedded to other-concern. Love is the answer. Yet how lovely life would seem if every man could weave this dream of life.

The most dynamic individual to invade the campus scene this year, Father Labbe created a unique rapport between the students and his administrative charges through permeating the archaic administrative policies.

Abiding by professional standards, although many times he developed his own rules and regulations, his distinctively vociferous, progressive attitude has resulted in many changes paralleling contemporary college atmospheres.

The Age of Aquarius . . . leaving the rock out, uptight, what's happenin', pop-top Sixties; flagrant mistakes, natural occurrences, phenomenal feats — racism, air pollution and the walk on the moon — we've experienced quite a bit. But back to the Seventies . . . and S.J.C. — President Banet claims, Without a goal there is no hope. Without Faith there is no hope. The odds are against us (or are they?) . . . the invisible killer, air pollution, threatens, the hippies cop out and the militants destroy. That understanding will be found in the Seventies is a pre-requisite for the upcoming "wondering era." Projecting Saint Joseph's College, existence lies in the goals, hope and trust of administrators, faculty members, students.

While the walls of most universities were quaking with student demands in the academic realm, Saint Joseph's College countered by ushering in Core — an innovative approach to education. Core is a conglomerate accumulation of "what's happening" in the modern world. Never again will S.J.C. students spend their study hours dwelling on the wheeling and dealing of Alexander of Egypt — instead they will apply knowledge of history, politics, economics, religion and philosophy from ancient cases to contemporary situations. Debates on racism in America, the war in Viet Nam, and germ and chemical warfare are central and stimulating aspects of the course.

Core is a haven for the student with a strongly-opinionated background. For others who are not easily stimulated, an attempt is made to "blow out the cobwebs." But the real impetus stems from the participation of the students, whose ingenuity should and in due time probably will control the course.

FACULTY

Variety Adds Spice, Popularity To History

The History Department, exemplifying a sound and diverse curriculum, enrolls about 10% of the student body who have selected history for one or more broad vocational goals: law school, teaching, graduate study and as a cultural background for a business career.

Besides the general course offerings, the History Department has designed special projects such as the January Interterm Study Tours to Europe and Mexico, and a variety of seminar-type courses. This year these included the History of Black America, the 1960's Revisited, Russian Intellectual History, Byzantine Studies and Introduction to Archeology.

Complementing its highly-regarded faculty, the department is honored to include as Distinguished Lecturer in History the Honorable Charles A. Halleck, who after a career of over three decades in the U.S. House of Representatives, teaches a seminar on "Washington since 1934."

Politics, Economics Clarify Societal Order

The goal of the Department of Political Science is to create an awareness of the great responsibilities in modern societies, and techniques used in shouldering the individual and collective burdens of mankind. Contributing to professional and civic judgement, it provides an understanding of government with an increased stress on the importance of maintaining social and economic order.

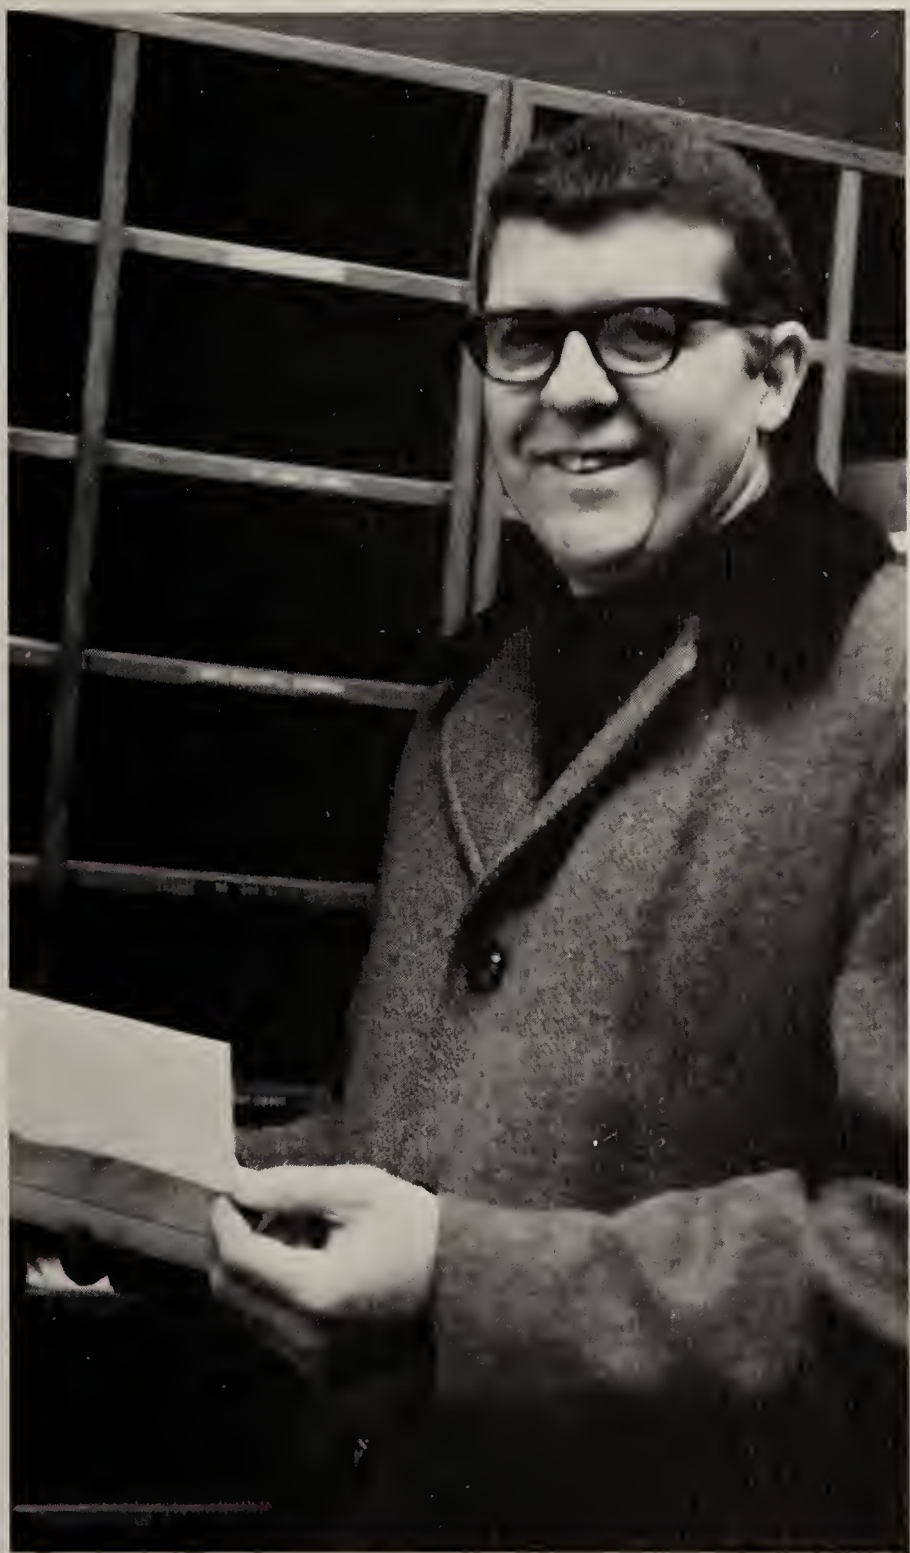

The function of the Department of Economics is conditioned to provide the student with a perspective by which to analyze and evaluate behavior and institutions. Recently, a two-semester sequence in mathematical economics has been introduced to equip the student for the quantitative approach used in graduate study, and the broader economic and social issues are considered in courses such as Socio-Economic Problems and Christian Ethics, Comparative Systems, and a recently-introduced series of seminars on varying topics.

Speech Abhors Silence As Golden; Educators Stress Student Response

In today's world of advanced communication techniques, Saint Joseph's Department of Communications and Theatre Arts is unique. The department offers a diversified program in communications with courses in rhetoric, public address, discussion and group dynamics which prepare students for careers requiring the ability to organize, substantiate, and express ideas effectively. In the area of theatre, instruction in acting, designing, and play production are augmented by a vigorous theatre program which explores our heritage from Euripides to Eugene O'Neill and Edward Albee. And with our campus-sponsored radio station, students have an excellent opportunity to familiarize and receive practice in this growing field.

Staffed by faculty members who take to heart the ever-increasing demands of the communications media placed upon today's Saint Joe student, each member is prepared to aid the major and general student in pursuing an academic career that will best suit his needs. In addition, the department sponsors campus plays, theatre tours, forensic programs, and interpretation contests for the total campus community.

Actively engaged in preparing students in becoming the educators of tomorrow, the Department of Education emphasizes knowledge of theoretical as well as practical devices of education.

Early in the student's career, the program offers courses on the theory of education while the senior year climaxes with an eight-hour method course on student teaching. The majors teach in surrounding grammar and high schools, independently controlling classroom situations.

Sociology Examines Contemporary Problems While Communication Is Key In Psychology

Once the authority of Theology and Philosophy had been successfully challenged in the physical and natural realm, scholars of the late 19th century advocated the scientific method to understand the social realm as well. Sociology began its development in the United States in the first two decades of the 20th century with numerous studies of contemporary social problems such as the urban ghetto, the delinquent girl, the Polish peasant and other problems arising from rapid urban and industrial growth.

Today, a student in Sociology can focus upon contemporary social problems at levels ranging from the theoretical and empirical to practical and social action approaches. A major in Sociology prepares the student for advanced work in Sociology, social work, and related disciplines or can serve as a general background for living and working in the contemporary world.

Engagement is a key word in Psychology at Saint Joseph's — engagement with people and engagement in the laboratory. The courses in clinical psychology are amplified by regular practical experience at the state mental hospitals (Westville and Logansport) and in classes for mentally retarded children in and near Rensselaer. In the experimental area, the department has its own laboratory, with an additional arrangement to use the biology laboratory and its four-channel physiograph.

Foreign Languages Balance Student's Education, Enhance Cultural Understanding

The general aims of the Department of Foreign Languages are to provide the student with a basic knowledge of a modern or classical language, and through the study of language to offer an insight into and an appreciation of the literature and culture of other people. Beyond the generally educative and the intellectually enriching values of language study, the basic skills in language — namely, the ability to read, write, and speak modern foreign languages and to read and write classical languages — prepare the student for entrance into graduate school, theological seminaries and the teaching profession. In supplementing the current academic program, the department has inaugurated major sequences of study in Classical Studies, French, and German.

In addition, with the proposed new library and learning center, the department is actively engaged in the planning of facilities utilizing modern electronic equipment in the language learning process. Such equipment has been available to a limited extent in the past, but completion of the learning center is seen as complementary to the expansion of the department.

The departmental staff has always been vitally interested in self-improvement, as evidenced by advanced professional studies, attendance at workshops and summer studies. Professional competency and vital interests in the students' needs are hallmarks of the language department.

English Paces Academic Innovation

Saint Joseph's Department of English almost defies brief description. The department consists of people whose ages, backgrounds, attitudes toward literature, teaching methods and social-political views vary so widely that rarely can the same statements about any important subject represent the attitudes of even two members.

A problem arising from the doggedly democratic tendencies has been solved by nothing short of a total revamping of departmental structure. Therefore, the chairman possesses little more power than other members since administrative matters are decided in open meetings. An elected student representative with full voting power also participates in all meetings.

During the past year, a totally new English curriculum was designed and perhaps the most stimulating of the innovations are the introduction of "Major Writers" and "Special Studies in Literature." These are "wild card" courses which permit the offering of a course in any subject of interest.

Personable Approach Trademark Of Geology; Music And Art Accentuate Aesthetic Needs

"Geology at 'Joes' differs from many other schools since we are a very 'tight-knit' group with an interest in working with and helping each other." During the years since its inception, a very high percentage of its alumni have successfully completed advanced study in many graduate schools throughout the country and subsequently performed admirably in their chosen profession.

To anchor the tradition of closeness within the department, especially when greater professional and personal communication is needed, the faculty is available for as much give-and-take discussion as possible. Through this learning posture, students and faculty alike can benefit academically and personally.

The Music program is characterized by highly-individualized instruction, an enviable teacher-student ratio and rapport, a wide choice of activities conducive to personal and professional growth, ready access to facilities and personnel, extensive travel and a vibrant spirit of togetherness and optimism.

Offering a wide variety of opportunities for musical participation is the Marching Band, Concert Band, Color Guard, Sweet Sixteen, Blue Knights Stage Band, Brass Ensemble, Men's Glee Club, Women's Chorus, Mixed Chorus, Rite of Spring Folk Singers and Summer Chorus.

For years, Saint Joseph's College Summer School of Liturgical Music has been internationally recognized and offers a Master's degree in Church Music in affiliation with DePaul University of Chicago. Accordingly, the Music Department is "where it's at" and is a department "for all seasons."

Innovation is descriptive of the Art Department with the introduction of the Art of Black Africa and Oriental Art, thereby providing the campus with a strong background in the liberal arts.

The heart of the department is its courses in general drawing, painting, sculpture and basic design.

Biology And Chemistry "Scope," Analyze Living Organisms In Laboratory

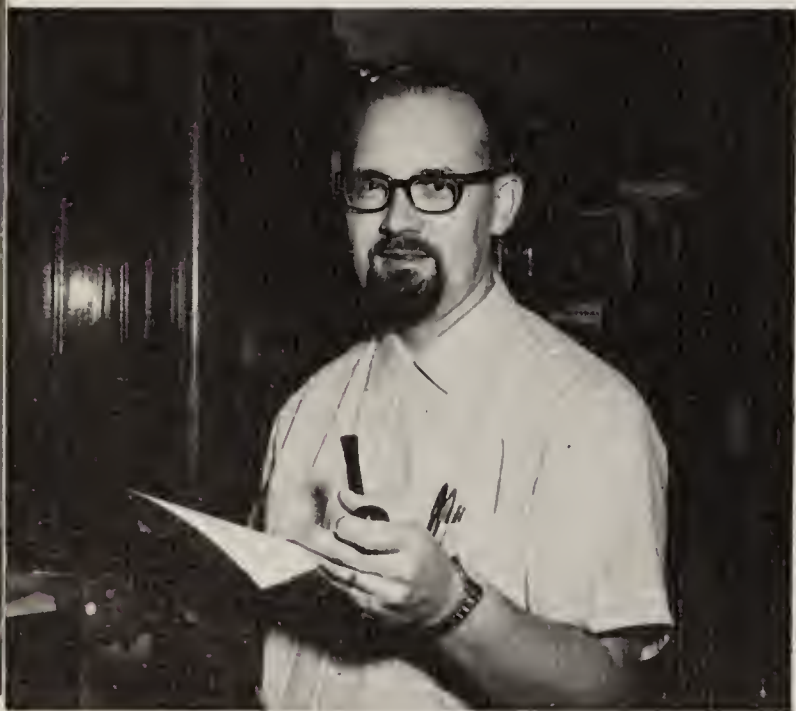

Work in biology may be carried on in the field, laboratory, classroom or library. Here at Saint Joseph's College, it is attempted to provide the student with the opportunity to see as many forms of living organisms in as much detail as the student can absorb. The course offerings are varied to enable each student to follow his individual preference — he may study living organisms at the macroscopic or microscopic level — he may work in the field or in the laboratory — he may study the relations between organisms or organs.

An important aspect of his training is the close fellowship he develops with his student peers. This relationship is fostered by membership in the student chapter of the American Institute of Biological Sciences, a national scientific society. A similar relationship is encouraged between the student and the staff members by frequent informal meetings and by the interterm field trip to a marine biological station.

Within the same realm, but on a different plane is chemistry: "The science dealing with the composition and properties of substances and with the reactions by which substances are produced from or converted into other substances." (Webster's New World Dictionary)

To accomplish the aforementioned, the Department of Chemistry has brought the classroom into the laboratory, providing the necessary answer in the analysis of complex chemical formations. Not only does the student delve into the theoretical, but within the laboratory he observes chemical phenomena. The greatest asset is the low student-teacher ratio which provides greater individual attention.

Covering all phases of chemical competence, the Chemistry Department grants the basic requirements for entrance to medical school, industrial chemistry, or graduate school.

Mathematics-Physics Integrate Theory And Application

The Department of Mathematics offers courses which are designed to aid the student in attaining a basic understanding and appreciation of the fundamental methods of deductive reasoning. One is exposed to the mathematical method, and the nature and use of mathematical systems and models. The methods and processes for disclosing the properties and relations of quantities and magnitudes, whether in the abstract sense, or in their practical applications, are discussed. Through the study of such rigorous concepts, the student receives adequate preparation for advanced study in graduate or professional schools.

Related to mathematics is the Department of Physics. Courses are offered within the area of physics that treat the laws governing motion, matter, and energy under conditions susceptible to precise observation. The student attains an understanding of basic principles through classroom discussion and supervised laboratory work. Within this area, the student is adequately prepared to engage in the teaching of physics in secondary schools.

Business Majors Simulate Real Conditions; Accounting-Finance Accents Experience

The primary objective of the Business Department is to aid in the development of responsible and ethical business leaders whose tasks include the diagnosis of problems, the making of sound decisions, and the planning of management and production activities.

Modern teaching techniques utilized by the department include the popular case method approach, decision-making procedures and testing by use of mathematical models. Recently developed is a procedure whereby electronic data processing equipment is programmed to simulate actual business conditions to enable students to make managerial decisions and observe the results.

The department has for many years been the largest in the college and a number of its graduates have achieved leadership positions in a variety of business organizations. Each year a number of these graduates return to campus from various parts of the country for the purpose of conducting a "career guidance" seminar to aid students interested in a business career.

The Department of Accounting-Finance provides its majors with the fundamental courses and academic training which prepares them for entrance into the profession of accountancy or financial analysis and management. The program is sufficiently flexible to permit a double major in accounting and finance.

The highlight of the Accounting-Finance program is the internship which permits a qualified student to gain valuable practical experience with an accounting or business firm during the first semester of his senior year. The internship lasts approximately ten weeks and the intern receives academic credit for this period as well as compensation from the participating firm.

As Hopeful Humans Strive For Happiness, And Harmony, Theology “Awakens” To Correct Inequities

If theology is to survive — and theology at Saint Joseph's expects a very long life — it can do so only by becoming more fully present to all the concerns of the contemporary world. These concerns are permeated by an evolutionary mode of thought. Development, process, history, change, uncertainty, instability — these are the catch words expressing the mood of our age. And an age such as ours begets its own dangerous and warring children: disregard for the past, refusal to live fully in the present, a despair about the future, an exaggerated hope in the omnipotence of technological man. Theology, with its roots deep in the past, with its mission to become incarnate in every age, and its hope for the parousia must be in our age a principle of peace, of mission and of hope. But theology in and of itself does none of these things. Systems in themselves are sterile. Theology comes to life only in human beings who are sensitive to their world, who are willing to search and listen, to be content with partial answers, with the clarity that makes only the next step possible, to be constructively dissatisfied with all that renders human life less human. This is how theology at Saint Joseph's understands itself and its role.

Philosophy Links Knowledge To Individual

Philosophy at SJC is relevant without forfeiting discipline, contemporary without losing the historical; it has attempted to open students to other disciplines, to turn them to the foundations of their specializations, to integrate their knowledge and link it with their lives. As a self-critical discipline, philosophy tries to aid students in discovery of both their freedom and their limits.

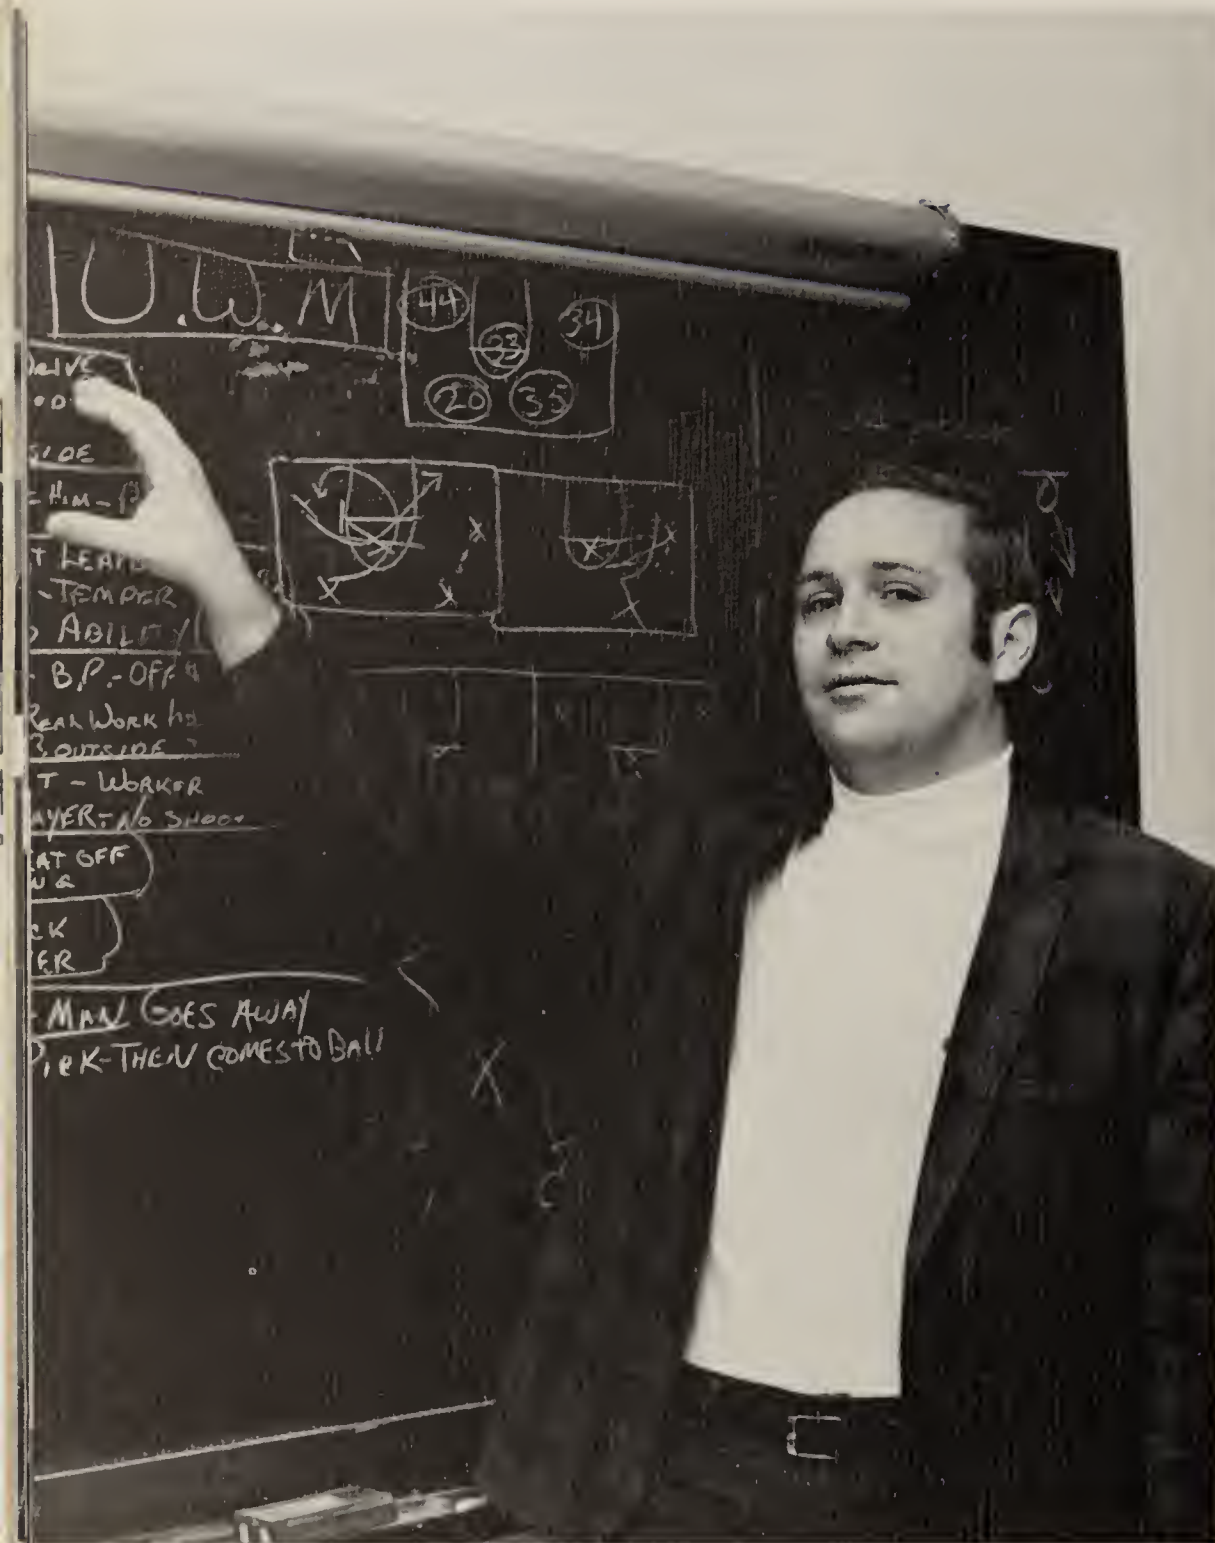

Besides offering area courses, various topics during the past three years have been taught under the heading of Great Issues. In an era that speaks of law and order, it offered a course on the philosophy of the New Left prophet, Herbert Marcuse; in a post-Vatican II epoch, it presented a course on the foundations of Rahner's theology. Other offerings included courses on Marcel's existentialism, evolutionary theory, phenomenology and language and spirit.

Athletes-Only Label A Misnomer; Physical Education Tests Intellect

Physical Education, although a specialized area of education, is a disciplined field with its own rationale or reasons for existence. It is not to be treated strictly as a science or as a subject but as a discipline, a field of study which grew out of interactions of a number of sciences. Like the humanities, physical education qualifies as a humanity because it deals with human materials, self-discovery, human thought, human values and human relations. As an applied social and biological science, it presupposes the application of information which is well established by the methods of pure sciences. Basic principles are isolated and their application illustrated. Search is made not only for the truth but also for its implications.

The curriculum offerings of the Department of Physical Education are predicated on the requirements of state certification for teachers of physical education in the secondary schools of our country. Relatively, the curriculum is similar to other reputable institutions of higher education offering a program for teacher preparation with a major in Physical Education.

This year, many innovations--student representatives on faculty and administration committees, better social activity, a Sunday brunch, changes in the drinking policy--were quite visible. But we hope that a certain genuine personal concern, the effects which might not be visible this year or next, will prove to be our best accomplishment for the student body.

SA President, Bill Holda

Holda, along with Bob Czarnecki, Vice-President, Chuck Carrico, Treasurer, and Kevin Griffin, Secretary, were tactful SA officers who promoted student harmony and an increased awareness of administrative policies.

In retrospect, the burden of sponsoring a healthy social life was carried by the SA and Junior and Senior class officers. To these individuals, shadows in the minds of most students, we extend our deepest respect.

And that's just what they did as the football squad blasted to its first winning season in ten years. But the real success story was the basketball team which brought an NCAA bid to S.J.C. Good fortune didn't cease with athletics, as Gary Smith's musical ability aided top-notch entertainment by the S.J.C. Marching Band, the Sweet Sixteen and the Color Guard.

Jim Holstein Named ICC Coach Of The Year

Did you have any indication before the season started that the team would perform so well?

Yes and no. We had three boys coming back from last year's team and we had to take for granted that they would become better ball players just through the experience they had. No to the question because we had two sophomores who are obviously question marks anytime they walk into varsity ball, but they have done a great job for us. Probably the most important thing that happened to us, though, was that before the year started we picked out 13 boys who wanted to play and we got rid of those who didn't.

Was there any strategic change in your coaching philosophy before or during the season?

No, not really. In coaching we try to adopt whatever knowledge we have to the boys we have and this year we were a little more fortunate than in the past, since the boys are a little smarter and they work together much better than most teams. I would say that the philosophy hasn't changed, although we have changed some things, depending on our talent.

Do you change your game plan due to the winning or losing of ball games? Have you changed since last year because you are winning more games?

No. Our philosophy and the types of things which we do as far as practice and preparing for games only changes upon the physical abilities of our ball players. We have changed this year, for example, so that when the boys looked tired, we would give them a day off from practice. But preparation for ball games is about the same, depending upon who we are playing, and what we know about them.

Is there any fundamental principle which you have impressed on the team that you hope they would follow during the game?

Yes, probably the biggest thing that we have pushed on them all year was to play together. Everything that they do, they have to do together. And, I suppose that we emphasize it to the point that in the beginning of the year we told them if they get shook up about something we say or do, they should do so together; one guy shouldn't go off in a corner and pout if he got mad but should come out and tell us as a team, not as individuals. I would say we pushed teamwork the most.

What preparations do the coaching staff take before a game?

Well, immediately before a ball game there are no preparations. If we are going to prepare for a ball game three days from now, we prepare for three days and at game time it's too late. The boys know then what they have to do. But the preparation is entirely dependent upon the scouting report, just how tough the opponent is as a unit, and individually. By game time each boy knows what every boy on the other team is capable of doing.

What effect will this year's performance have upon future recruiting?

It should be a great boon for us in recruiting because everyone wants to be with a winner and, we are winning, and we think this will help us quite a bit. Going to a tournament hurts our recruiting for two or three weeks because we have to prepare for games and can't get on the road as much as we would like to, but that is a problem we would love to live with every year.

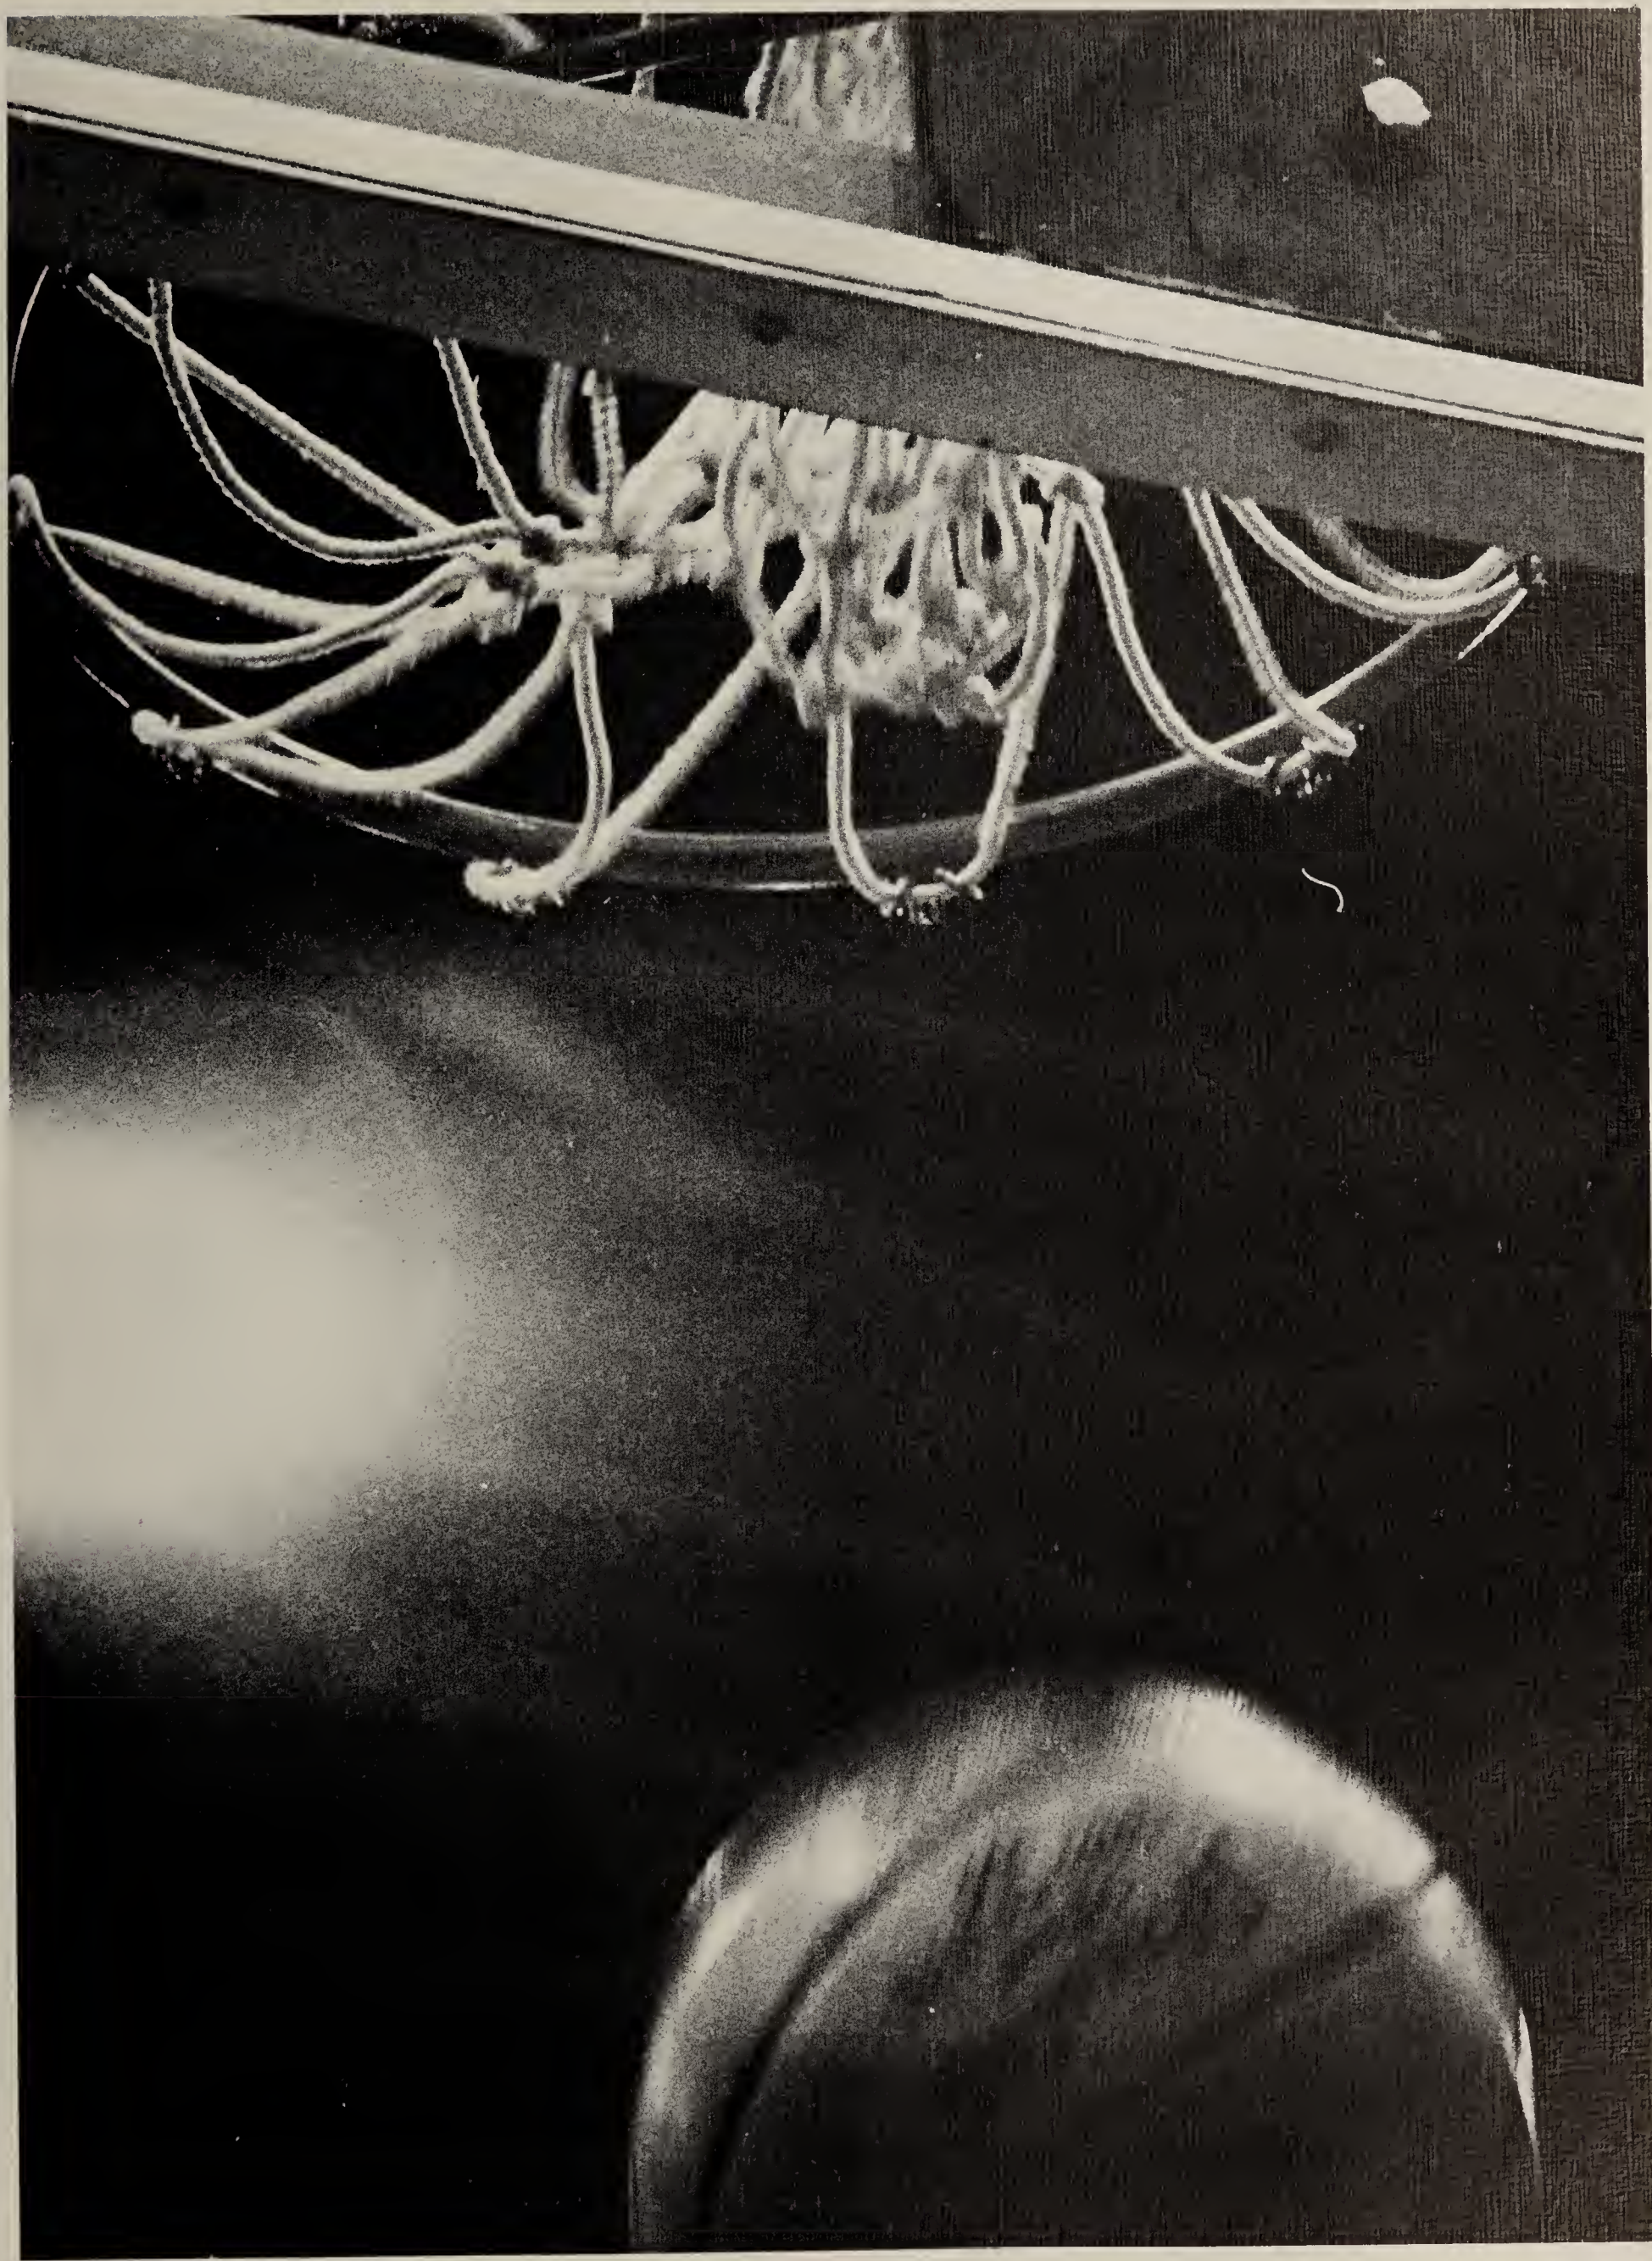

What do you do to motivate the individual ball player and the team as a whole?

We have been very fortunate this year as you know. We have two fine assistant coaches, young men who have taken the players on the side before practice and after practice and worked on their weak points, and I would say this would be the biggest thing that has helped the boys individually. Again, as a team, we just go back to being together. Togetherness is the whole thing.

Do you think that the fans here at Saint Joe's made any difference in the winning season?

Tremendous! They say it's a ten-point advantage . . . you just can't put your finger on an advantage like this. Our ball club relies an awful lot on the fans. Our students are probably the most enthusiastic group we have played in front of. I have always said that every coach in the nation should have one year of coaching at Saint Joe's to find out just what good spirit is.

Keep winning — that's exactly what the Puma wrestlers did while notching a 5-0 record in dual matches. Baseball also conformed to its victorious predecessors by finishing above .500. But winning wasn't the whole story. Tennis, track and golf were stained with defeats, although the linksmen finished third in the ICC tournament.

What is a Puma? By no means is he a number. He certainly isn't a computer card, nor a symbol. He's an individual . . . not one among faces, but a face. He's not an automotive response machine, but a debater, a thinker. He has a conscience, he follows it. He worries . . . he ponders . . . he loves . . . he needs . . . he seeks . . . he's growing . . . so big . . . and here . . . he's that giant in the forest.

Go, Senior. There's a call . . . they want you . . . but mesmerize them . . . scintillate them . . . make them wonder . . . make them know, you! Remember the end . . . remember the beginning . . . the security of the campus . . . thrust into the mainstream of life . . . hair sometimes long, until the first job interview. Take off that gown, there's no covering now . . . you're bare . . . now you must make your own security . . . now use that knowledge and never cease to learn.

The days, the weeks, the months have passed; certainly shadows in most minds. The year, 1970, capsulized in Phase Seventy, is a remembrance of individuals who left impressions on campus at one time or another. The formula for a dedication was built by these individuals but the ingredients were the "unknowns," the shadows in the minds of most students who made 1970 the year it was.

We dedicate this book to the hundreds of unknown fans who supported the athletic teams, to the concerned individuals who comprised the various weekends, to the unknowns who made the "I" program a success, to the unknowns who went into the community to teach, to the unknown professors who worked so diligently to better communications, and to YOU — the participant, the observer, the subject.

Acknowledgements: Our gratitude is extended to our News Bureau Director Chuck Schuttrow, for his patience and guidance; to his wife Delores; to Taylor yearbook representative Jim Bell and to those who have offered suggestions or constructively criticized existing ideas.

In the beginning there is a search, and at the end there is a picture — the mental flashback of one school year dedicated to finding the candle of truth. Truth springs from study and study is growth, much as growth is life and life is the heartbeat of man's creation and ultimate salvation.
